Odom confident in protecting consumers from unsafe fish

Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Bob Odom remains confident he will be able to continue to require fish adulterated with a class of antibiotics known as fluoroquinolones to be removed from sale before the seafood importer can force the fish back into the market place.

In mid-June, a federal judge denied the request of Piazza's Seafood World LLC that Odom be ordered by preliminary injunction to free Chinese seafood product not yet tested for return to the market place. The judge also ruled that the issue of Odom's authority raised by Piazza's in the lawsuit requires a decision from the state courts and the federal proceeding filed by Piazza's would have to await the outcome a state court's ruling on that issue.

Fish from China, imported by Piazza's of the New Orleans area, turned up positive for a banned drug in sampling tests ordered by Odom after he received notice that fish from China had tested positive for the banned drug. Under a testing program enforced by Odom and authorized by Louisiana law, seafood must be tested and free from fluoroquinolones and free of any other adulteration before it can be sold or shipped.

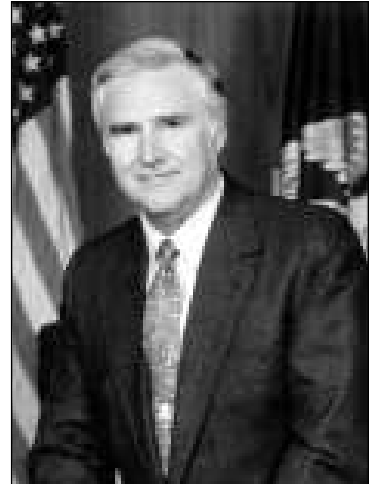

Rather than continue with the testing program that has cleared most of the product, Piazza's filed suit in federal court to order Odom to release the remaining product back into the market place so it could be sold. Piazza's suit claims Odom lacks the authority to order the adulterated product to be held as that authority, according to Piazza's, is in the Louisiana Department of Health and Hospitals and not the Department of Agriculture and Forestry which Odom heads. The suit also alleges the procedures Odom employs in enforcing the law are unconstitutional. Odom's reply in court stated Odom's department had authority to hold the product, which authority was both "abundant and redundant" and the issue of whether he did or did not have sufficient authority was a state law issue that must be decided by state courts.

Odom also advised he is operating under a type of cooperative agreement with the Department of Health and Hospitals specifically authorized by the state constitution. The agreement would provide the disputed authority even if Odom didn't already have that authority. In addition, Odom advised the court Piazza's had filed the same suit in state court where it needed to be and then dismissed that suit and filed the current and premature federal one.

Piazza's has 150,000 pounds of Chinese seafood remaining that under Odom's order can not be sold See Protecting consumers, continued on page 12
